There is a place called The Open where brave people put things.
 Things that belong to them.
 Things they can no longer carry.
 Big things. Or little things they fear are growing. All those private rainbows watered in pot plants on dark windowsills that suddenly sprang up overnight into twisting roller coasters tonguing through your flat...things that have become a thing

It's like fly-tipping but legal and you don't need a truck.
 There's no limit to the amount one person can offload. No toxicity regulations. The Open can swallow it. It is always hungry. There will be no rising smoke, after-odour, no bell-ringer in a tower grabbing a rope, no consequence unless you dive in with it.
